

PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY.

The giving to Mother Phillips, one day last week, a Christian burial, was an exhibition of practical Christianity generally more honored in the breach than the observance in the world.

It shows that Christ's judgment of human nature was correct when he uttered an aphorism that has come down unchanged to us through nearly two thousand years.

"And the greatest of these is charity."

Surely no greater tribute could be paid a woman who, while engaged nearly all her life in an infamous calling, bestowed so much in charity and was so generally recognized as a practical philanthropist, that her clay was treated with all possible respect. Ladies belonging to the Church choir of the city did not hold aloof when asked to assist in the funeral, but sang the Burial Hymn over the coffin, the pall bearers marched the streets along side the hearse, there were plenty of good, honest citizens who drove their carriages in the procession and a minister of the Gospel conducted the funeral services at the house which for years had been given over to gilded wickedness.

It is seldom the church invades the house of dishonor, but no one will deny that the mingling of Christian ladies with prayer and hymn with the unfortunate women who wept over Mrs. Phillips' coffin, must have done the latter a great deal of good. They joined in the Lord's Prayer and sang the hymns in away that showed there was a time in the long ago when these prayers and songs had been upon their lips amid purer surroundings. The sermon awakened the better memories of happy childhood when the songs had gone up from virtuous firesides and the prayers had been said by the mother's knee.

Between the churches and these unfortunate people there is a great gulf fixed, a gulf which gapes so wide that it is seldom crossed, but when it is bridged by such an affair as witnessed in this city on Thursday, it brings the good and the erring in a close communion of natural sympathy and some practical Christianity is witnessed; the sort the Savior was in the habit of preaching when he mingled with all mankind at Palestine, when he asked those who were without sin to cast the first stone at the woman taken in adultery, and forgave the thief upon the cross at Calvary.

Riot in Panama.

Panama has just been treated to a two days riot over a newspaper article. One hundred were killed and five hundred wounded.

A Strange Case.

News comes from Douglas county that about three weeks ago a woman died near Woodfords under peculiar circumstances. The husband said he found her dead. The neighbors say that blood and foam were oozing from her mouth when they found her. There were also peculiar marks on her feet and abrasions on her face.

An Indian who was working at the place says that one day the woman fell over on the floor and that her husband coming home found her there and thought that she had fainted. He was badly intoxicated and the Indian says he placed brands of burning coals at her feet to arouse her and then placed a gridstone on her face. These remedies seemed to have failed. The neighbors think that she died of apoplexy and was dead before her husband arrived.

The City Sewerage.

The City Trustees last evening decided to introduce a bill in the Legislature to enable them to dispose of the city sewerage. Mr. Reynolds will introduce it.

The Attorney General has been empowered by act of the Legislature to employ additional counsel to unravel the Constitutional law in reference to the amendments. It is understood that he will employ either Gen. Clarke or Hon. Wm. Woodburn.

The Bruner case has been dismissed in San Francisco. Bruner was guilty, but he vowed that bigger men than he would go down if he was convicted.
